Dallas Cowboys vs New York Giants will be a cream of the crop NFC East battle for division supremacy in NFL week 10. The Cowboys, 6-2 ATS, looked like a top-flight contender for the NFC title last week with a 38-17 dismantling of the Philadelphia Eagles as -3 point favs. The Giants, 5-3 ATS, are coming off a bye week well rested and ready to knock heads at home. BetUS.com has Dallas as -1.5 point favorites.

This game has shootout written all over it after these two teams put up a 90 spot combined in their Week 1 game. The New York D has tightened up in their six game winning streak allowing only 13.2 points per game in that stretch but they will be facing a Dallas team that is posting 33.1 points per game. The New York Giants have been on a roll mainly due to excellent line play on both sides of the ball. The Giants have recorded 30 sacks on defense while allowing only 8 sacks to Eli Manning. BetUS.com has the TOTAL on this game at 49 points.

Manning will be under some heat in this game however from a Dallas D that has 21 sacks including 5.5 from DE Greg Ellis in his last five games. The Giants strong running attack will be met by an equally powerful Dallas run D that is allowing 84.4 yards per game. While statistically the Giants D has been impressive it has been mainly against weak teams and their ground game will be tested by Dallas RB Marion Barber who is slicing through defenses for 5.4 yards per carry. Cowboys QB Tony Romo has a 100.4 passer rating with his dangerous weapons and he could expose an aging Giants secondary.
