The Giants started the defense of their championship in impressive fashion. New York imposed their will on the Redskins in last Thursday's season opener and showed that they will be a contender this year as well. This Sunday the Giants will travel to St. Louis to take on a Rams team that looked like they will contend for the cellar in the NFC West. Week 2 NFL betting odds at Looselines.com have the road Giants as a -8.5 favorite.

New York jumped on Washington early in the game last week and did enough to pull out a 16-7 win. The offense was balanced, methodical, and efficient as Eli Manning passed for 216 yards and running back Brandon Jacobs rushed for 116 on 21 carries. The defense throttled the Redskins at every turn and Washington produced a meager 209 yards of total offense. They should expect more of the same this week against a struggling Rams offense.

St. Louis looked every part of a 3-13 team in their opening game at Philadelphia. The Rams had the ball for slightly under 25 minutes and they created all of 166 yards on offense. Running back Steven Jackson averaged just 2.9 yards per carry and quarterback Marc Bulger threw for a miserable 158 yards. The Rams defense folded after being on the field for over 35 minutes and they gave up 522 yards to Donovan McNabb and the Eagles offense.

Key Match-up: The Rams can expect more of the same this week if they do not protect Bulger. Bulger was sacked four times on Sunday and the Giants will be bringing the heat early and often this week.

Week 2 NFL Picks Trend: The Over is 6-2 the last two seasons when the Rams are a home underdog.

Looselines.com's Week 2 NFL betting odds for the Giants vs Rams:

Giants -8.5 (-110), Over 41.5 (-110)

Rams +8.5 (-110), Under 41.5 (-110)
