Major League Baseball betting activity will kick into high gear by Wednesday morning (Oct. 1) when the MLB post season begins. Already online sportsbook Bodog (Bodoglife.com) has a full set of MLB playoff's and world series odds beginning with tonight's play-in game between the White Sox and Twins to the World Series.

The National League East winners Philadelphia Phillies will get things started Wednesday at 3 p.m. ET when they begin the best of five-game NLDS with the wild-card winners Milwaukee Brewers. Oddsmakers at Bodog have installed the Phillies as the series favorite with a money line price of -175. Brewers backers are getting +155 money line odds for the series.

The Los Angeles Dodgers and Chicago Cubs, each divisional winners, get their NLDS series going Wednesday at 6 p.m. ET from Wrigley Field in Chicago. The Cubs are listed as -225 favorites while the Dodgers are getting +185 odds.

Wednesday night caps off out west in Anaheim, Calif., where the Los Angeles Angels have home field to the Boston Red Sox. The Western Division winners Angels are -130 odds favorites to the Sox who are getting +110 odds.

As soon tonight's play-in game between the Chicago White Sox and Minnesota Twins is completed, Bodog will post the ALDS odds between the Tampa Bay Rays and the WS/Twins winner.

Odds to win the National League Pennant: The Chicago Cubs carry the burden of favorite in this category, installed at 6/5 odds to represent the NL in the World Series. If Chicago behaves as expected and makes it to the fall classic, they will be 3/1 odds favorite to win the World Championship. Keep in mind that these odds are strictly pre-post season odds and will change day to day.
