

Will John McCain Presidential Concession Speech go Double Maverick?

Contributed by Stu Norman
Monday, 03 November 2008
Last Updated Tuesday, 04 November 2008

Republican Presidential Candidate John McCain jokingly told viewers of the Weekend Update on SNL that he would deploy a few new strategies in the final days of his campaign including the Double Maverick "where I go totally berserker and just freak everybody out."

A pit boss friend of Point-Spreads.com saw Arizona Senator John McCain going Double Maverick at a craps table in Las Vegas several years ago during a prize fight gambling weekend but that story will have to wait for another day. What I want to know is will John McCain go Double Maverick in his Presidential Concession Speech? Well, I would not put it past the aging Arizona Senator after a disorganized and erratic 2008 Presidential Campaign.

The oddsmakers at BetUS.com have posted political betting odds on when Republican Presidential Candidate John McCain will give his concession speech and it looks like its going to be an early night for the Republican Party. Tuesday November 4th is the favorite at -400 odds with Wednesday November 5th listed at +250 odds. Point-Spreads.com thinks Wednesday the 5th is a great value bet.

Barack Obama is a huge -1000 election odds favorite and if the prediction markets are accurate the Illinois Senator will make history as the first African American when he is named the 44th President of the United States. Do your civic duty and make sure to get to the polls today to vote for your candidate.

BetUS.com posted political betting odds on when Republican Presidential Candidate John McCain will give his Presidential Concession Speech :

Tuesday 4th November: -400
Wednesday 5th November: +250
Later than Wednesday 5th November: +800
No concession speech: +500

For a complete discussion on the Presidential Election and Politics visit www.politicalwatercooler.com.