College Football Odds Week 1: The 2009 college football season kicks off this week with a slate of games scheduled for Thursday, September 3rd. The most notable contests to open the year are South Carolina at North Carolina State and Oregon at Boise State. College Football Odds Week 1 at BetUS.com have the home teams favored in both games, the Wolfpack coming in at -4.5 against the spread and the Broncos an almost identical -4.

Steve Spurrier's Gamecocks roll into Raleigh this Thursday hoping to repeat last year's result against North Carolina State. South Carolina took out an inexperienced Wolfpack team 34-0 in that game after holding Tom O'Brien's squad to just 138 yards of offense.

The tables have turned somewhat since that contest, though, as Spurrier has just 11 starters back from 2008's 7-6 team. The Wolfpack welcome back 14 frontline players from a team that closed out last year's schedule with four straight regular season wins. North Carolina State is also more sure at the quarterback position with sophomore Russell Wilson.

Wilson started the year at quarterback for NCST as a redshirt freshman last season, going on to win first team ACC honors; however, he left last year's meeting with South Carolina in the first half with a concussion.

Oregon heads to Boise seeking to exact some revenge after the Broncos came into Eugene and knocked the Ducks off 37-32 in week four of the 2008 season. However, the Ducks will make the trek with a new head coach in Chip Kelly. Longtime leader Mike Bellotti stepped down after a terrific 14 year stint with the program, one that saw the Ducks go 116-55.

Only nine starters are back for Kelly, but the talent level is strong. Kelly has also proven over the last two seasons as the Oregon offensive coordinator that he knows how to put points on the board (Ducks averaged a Pac-10 leading 41.9 points per game in 2008).

Boise State enters the year with BCS aspirations after going 12-1 last year. A soft schedule could make that happen, but getting by the Ducks and quarterback Jeremiah Masoli is a big opening hurdle. History is in the Broncos favor though, as they are 23-2 straight up in their last 25 games in Boise.

Game Notes: South Carolina vs North Carolina State kicks off at 7:00pm ET and will be televised live on ESPN. Oregon vs Boise State is scheduled to get underway at 10:15pm ET and will also be broadcast live on ESPN.
