College Football Picks Week 6: Everybody loves a winner, but there is nothing wrong with a loser that brings home the bacon week in and week out. After five weeks of college football action, there are several teams that have established themselves as great fades. Some of the teams may be more high profile than others, but the return is the same at the cashier's window. Check out online bookmaker SBGglobal.com for the latest College Football Picks Week 6 and odds on two classic faders.

Illinois: The Fighting Illini are a perfect example of an overvalued team that odds makers have yet to make an adjustment on. Ron Zook's team received way too much preseason hype and people in the know took advantage of this as Illinois went 1-3 straight up and 0-4 against the spread. The team, which just benched quarterback Juice Williams, is presently listed as a +4.5 home dog in this weekend's meeting with Michigan State. They still look like a great fade, especially in this situation. Consider that Illinois is 0-7 straight up and 2-5 against the spread in their last seven games as a home dog with a spread between 4 and 7.5. Take the Spartans and keep cashing on the Ron Zook express to oblivion.

New Mexico: This team stinks out loud and the odds makers know it, they just have not inhaled the full stinch. The Lobos are 0-5 straight up under first year coach Mike Locksley and they are just 1-4 against the point spread. Their only cover occurred last week when they were listed as a +34.5 road dog against Texas Tech. This week they take on Mountain West rival Wyoming in Laramie. New Mexico is coming in at +10 right now, which seems like a good time to jump on them considering their recent history against the Pokes, but do not be fooled. Wyoming should be able to move the ball on the ground against the Lobos soft defense, thus controlling the line of scrimmage, the clock, and the game.
